Fee Structure

The following is the methodology for calculation of our professional fee for both litigious and transactional (non-litigious) work:

- (i) Litigation is charged on a case-to-case basis. Typically, the entire fee for the case along with estimated expenses is paid up front. The flat fee (excluding court expenses) covers the entire handling of a case from filing to its final disposal, irrespective of the time involved or the number of court hearings required for the conclusion of that particular case. Appeals or other legal proceedings, e.g. arbitration and mediation proceedings, arising from a case are treated as separate cases.

The actual fee charged varies accordingly. The factors considered whilst calculating the fee to be charged in any case include the complexity of the legal and factual issues involved therein and the time and efforts required to be put in by the lawyers of the firm.

- ii) Transactional (non-litigious) work is charged on a flat-fee basis. The factors considered whilst calculating the fee include the legal and factual complexities involved and the hours consumed in fulfilling the requisite task(s).
